In Memory of Jeremy Eschelbacher
1970 - 2015

"You learn the most from your mistakes, so let's make them fast and often" ~JE

Mr. Eschelbacher encouraged everyone to make mistakes. He challenged his students to think, experiment, and question everything. He recognized that understanding was not about questions and answers, but rather the processes that moved us from questions to answers and back again.

Mr. Eschelbacher's world revolved around family. His children and students made up that family and he was proud of both. He understood the importance to teach them not only about science, but also life. He taught how to act and interact, how to learn and then teach what you've learned, how to be passionate and compassionate. He was a father, a husband, a teacher, a mentor, and a friend.

Respected as a forward thinker, Mr. Eschelbacher was a big picture guy. He was willing to take risks knowing that there is always room for improvement. He challenged people because he knew they could do better and he always enjoyed a challenge himself. He was never comfortable with complacency.

Jeremy Eschelbacher made an impact on those who were fortunate enough to find themselves in his presence. Now we must move forward without him, confident his impact will help drive us when we are asking the hard questions, not settling for the quick answer, and striving to do what is right.

Anna Smith

Watching you grow from a little girl to the independent person you are today has been such a joy for us. We couldn't be prouder of all you have done, and couldn't be prouder of the leap you are about to take. It takes a strong person to leave home and travel halfway across the country. There is no doubt in our minds that you will succeed down whatever path this next journey takes you. You had smiling eyes since you were a baby, and now we will have smiling (tearful) eyes watching you graduate from high school and begin this next adventure. Be true to yourself, stay confident, and have fun. Rock Chalk Jayhawk!

With All Our Love,
Dad and Mom
